

Question Corner

Q –“How can I be involved in French at my child’s school if I don’t speak French?”

A –There are many ways in which parents can become involved in French, such as assisting on class trips or with special events in the class or school or participating in French social activities or information nights. Many schools are looking for volunteers to listen to children read in French. Even if your French language skills are limited, your attentive listening would be appreciated by young students and their teachers. French students are sometimes involved in French drama or music presentations and may be grateful to receive artistic, musical, or technological assistance. 😊

“We already knew that learning another language improves our knowledge of our mother tongue, and thanks to the work of Professor Ellen Bialystok and others, we also knew that bilingualism has positive effects on the brain at both ends of life,” Professor Cook (Newcastle University).
